Introduction
Transition planning is a formal process for helping students with Individualized Education Programs (IEPs) determine what they want to do after high school and how to get there successfully. It is required by the Individuals with Disabilities Education Act (IDEA).

Under IDEA, a student’s IEP must include transition services by the time the student turns 16. However, planning often starts earlier. Many IEP Teams begin working with students as early as middle school to help them explore their interests and possible careers.

The purpose of transition planning is to help the student prepare to be an independent adult. The student should be encouraged to attend IEP meetings and to play a leading role in the IEP plan. IEP transition planning is more than just a hopeful exercise or brainstorming session. During planning, the student will work on specific goals geared to prepare the student for life after high school. The student will also receive services to help achieve these goals.

Some transition services can only be provided by outside organizations and not the school. During transition planning, the circle of people involved in a student’s transition plan may expand to include people from the community. These may include counselors, employment agency staff, job coaches and transition specialists.

At the heart of the transition process is the transition plan. To develop this plan, the IEP Team will work with the student to identify the student’s strengths and interests. This, in turn, will guide planning.

The transition plan has two parts: postsecondary goals and transition services.

Postsecondary goals should state what the student wants to do or achieve after high school. Goals can be in four areas:
1. Vocational training (e.g., learning a trade)
2. Postsecondary education (e.g., college or other schooling)
3. Jobs and employment
4. Independent living

Transition goals related to independent living may involve having the student take on responsibilities. Here are some examples of what the student may learn to do in preparation for adulthood:
- Open a bank account and learn to manage money.
- Shop for groceries and plan and prepare meals.
- Be responsible for maintaining a car and buy auto insurance.
- Use public transportation.
- Schedule their own appointments with the doctor and dentist and choose health insurance.
- Organize a calendar for school, work, personal appointments and leisure time.

Transition goals should not just reflect a hope or desire. Transition goals must specifically be beneficial to the student’s plans for life after high school. Preparing IDEA students for a successful life after high school is the ultimate goal for LEAs across the State.
